Market Commentary

Q4-2025 Market Review

Q4-2025 Market Review US equity markets concluded the fourth quarter of 2025 with modest gains, as the S&P 500 index advanced by +2.00%. Performance was notably driven by sector rotation, with Healthcare (+8.8%), Materials (+4.5%), and Financials (+3.2%) leading the way, while Real Estate (-3.1%) and Consumer Discretionary (-1.6%) lagged. International developed markets, as measured by the MSCI EAFE, significantly outperformed US large-caps, posting a strong return of +5.0% for the quarter. Domestically, the Russell 2000 also showed robust performance, gaining +2.9%, indicating broadening market strength beyond mega-cap technology names. The Federal Reserve continued its measured approach, maintaining a focus on inflation management and economic stability, which contributed to relatively stable fixed income markets, with the Aggregate Bond index returning +0.7%.

Portfolio Impact

Portfolio Impact Our diversified portfolio delivered a commendable return of +2.70% for the quarter, outperforming the S&P 500 benchmark by +0.70%, or 70 basis points. This outperformance was primarily attributable to our strategic equity allocations and individual security selection. Key contributors included our position in Johnson & Johnson (JNJ), which returned +12.2%, and Apple (AAPL), which gained +6.2%. Our core US equity exposure through VTI also contributed positively with a +2.4% return. While our fixed income holdings, such as BND (+0.6%) and VGIT (+0.8%), provided ballast and positive returns, the equity component was the primary driver of our alpha generation this quarter, effectively navigating the sector leadership shifts.

Outlook & Positioning

Outlook & Positioning As we look ahead to 2026, we anticipate continued market volatility driven by evolving economic data and geopolitical developments. We expect the Federal Reserve to maintain a data-dependent stance, with potential for interest rate adjustments primarily influenced by persistent inflation trends and labor market conditions. Our portfolio remains strategically positioned with a strong emphasis on high-quality equities, which we believe offer resilience and sustainable growth potential in various economic environments. We also continue to manage duration carefully within our fixed income allocation and maintain exposure to select real assets for diversification. A 5% cash allocation provides both liquidity for client needs and optionality to capitalize on future market opportunities. We plan our next comprehensive rebalancing review for early Q1 2026 to ensure alignment with our long-term strategic objectives.
